2019-2020 IEMS Visiting Professor of Instruction:
Patrick and Amy McCarter Fellow in Residence

The Department of Industrial Engineering and Management Sciences (IEMS) at Northwestern University invites applications for our McCarter Fellow in Residence. The McCarter Fellow will be a visiting professor of instruction and an experienced teacher, who wishes to spend part or all of an academic year with IEMS teaching undergraduate courses and interacting with researchers in the department. We expect that the exchange of ideas and best practices will benefit both IEMS and the McCarter Fellow.

Northwestern IEMS boasts a top-five PhD program, as well as a top-ten undergraduate program, and its faculty are respected worldwide for their leadership in multiple research areas. The McCarter Fellow will be invited to collaborate in research with current faculty while supporting the undergraduate program by teaching foundational courses and advising student projects. Opportunities to teach special topics courses or to develop new courses that can serve both the Northwestern population and the visitor’s home institution are welcomed. The Department is also interested in co-curricular activities (such as undergraduate research, workshops, seminars, competitions, or similar events) that offer the opportunity for Northwestern students and students from the home institution to collaborate.

Successful candidates for the McCarter Fellow in Residence will typically be tenured faculty members on sabbatical or leave from their home institution for all or part the 2019-2020 academic year, with demonstrated excellence in teaching and an interest in the assessment and improvement of student learning. McCarter Fellow stipends will be commensurate with experience, and the teaching load will be negotiated based on the ideas and opportunities proposed by the candidate.

Applications should be submitted electronically to https://www.mccormick.northwestern.edu/industrial/career/mccarter-fellow/ and should include
• Cover letter and CV
• Statement of purpose, including description of courses the candidate is particularly interested in teaching or developing, as well as proposal for any co-curricular opportunities the candidate wishes to pursue
• Statement of teaching philosophy
• Teaching evaluations for at least the last four years
• List of references familiar with the candidate’s experience and interest in teaching and learning.
